FINNISH RESCUE AVIATOR FLYING TO THE ICE FLOE

SETS OUT FROM VIRGO BAY IN A SKI-EQUIPPED AIR-PLANE

APPEAL FOR IMMEDIATE HELP WAS RADIOED THIS MORNING

By ERIK BERNSEN
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Virgo Bay, Spitzbergen, June 30.—(Copyright 1928 by United Press)—Lieut. Sarko, Finnish rescue aviator, took off hurriedly at noon today in his ski-equipped airplane for the Italia ice camp off Northeastland, immediately after receipt of a radio message saying that the camp was in imminent danger of being swept into the open sea.

Lieut. Sarko said before he left that, regardless of difficulties, he was determined to land on the treacherous ice floe where the camp is pitched and rescue Natale Ceccione, the wounded chief engineer of the Italia.

The appeal for immediate help came from Lieut. Einar-Paul Lundborg, Swedish star aviator, landed at the camp and rescued Gen. Umberto Nobile, commander of the lost polar dirigible.

Returning to take off Ceccione, next on the list to be rescued of the six men in the camp, Lundborg's plane crashed and was damaged seriously.

Lundborg had radioed previously that the ice floe—600 by 900 feet—on which the camp is pitched was breaking. Today he said that help was needed urgently if he and the five Italia men were to be saved from almost certain death.

Sarko volunteered for the job at once, and said he would not return without a companion from the camp. Lundborg's message said the Italia's ice camp now was 7½ miles east of Cape Leigh Smith, and was moving at the rate of five miles a day.

The desperate plight of the men marooned on the ice floe was told plainly by this portion of the message. At first, their rate of drift toward warmer water and an inevitable break-up of the ice was less than half a mile a day. Now the ice is moving more rapidly each day.

All the men in the camp, Lundborg said, were working desperately to preserve the runway constructed under his supervision so that a rescue plane might have a better chance than he did to make a safe landing.

They were working under severest rigors in the face of a storm, he said.

Lieut. Sarko took with him spare parts that would permit repairs to be made to Lundborg's own plane.

A Swedish Fokker plane, equipped like Sarko's with skis for landing on the ice, was in readiness to start momentarily from the vicinity of the rescue steamship Quest, acting as supply ship here.

Washington, June 30.—(U.P.)—Dr. Hubert Work will leave Washington today to present his resignation as secretary of interior to President Coolidge.

He announced the appointment of James W. Good of Chicago as western campaign manager and Representative Walter A. Newton of Minnesota, as director of the Western Speakers' Bureau. Good was Hoover's pre-convention campaign manager, and Newton one of his earliest boosters for the presidency. Western headquarters will be established in Chicago.

Work will arrive at the summer White House at Brule, Wis., Monday and resign immediately. He will spend at least two days with the president, however, and probably do a little fishing with Mr. Coolidge.

Work plans to devote his entire time to managing the Hoover-Curtis presidential campaign and will return to Washington about July 9 to take up actively his new duties as chairman of the republican national committee.

Meantime the republican presidential nominee, Herbert Hoover, has nearly finished his cabinet work at the commerce department, and now is spending several hours a day drafting his acceptance speech.

Hoover will decide next week when he will leave for the Pacific coast. Railroad executives already are dickering for him to ride on their lines. Several rail millionaires have offered the nominee their private cars to make the transcontinental journey.

Breezy Point, Minn., June 29.—Kappa Kappa Gamma International fraternity, in its fifth day here, found Friday a day full of activities, ranging from a business session held in the morning with its reports of convention committees to an afternoon devoted to athletics and an evening starting with a round table on chapter visiting and ending with an outburst of Kappa fun culminating in competitive stunts.

Kappa mermaids splashed in the water of Big Pelican lake and were unafraid as the temperature of 85 degrees made it most invigorating. There were diving and swimming contests galore and the judges are still wrestling over who made the best swan dive. General chairman of sports is Miss Dorothy Mann. In charge of golf is Miss Helen Robertson Cobb, archery Miss Catherine Cudworth, tennis Miss Madeline Race, swimming Miss Eleanor Mann, bridge Miss Edith Williams.

Mrs. Margaret McDonald Anderson of Minneapolis is the efficient editor of "The Hoot."

The bowling tournament chalked up these scores: Barbara Poore, Chicago, 106; Eleanor Marion, Chicago, 160; Nancy Mathewson, New York, 149; Genevieve Shaver, Portland, Ore., 138; Josephine D. Blair, St. Paul, 102; Margaret Lewdele, Minneapolis, 140; Lou Johnson, Minneapolis, 181; Edith LaVoie, St. Paul, 162; Helen Jordan, Chicago, 181.

The golfing Kappas turned in these scores: Mary Litzler, Minneapolis, 106; Luella Swahlen, Minneapolis, 110; Mrs. F. Ensign, Chicago, 112; Ruth Connors, New York, 100; Betty Simmons, Duluth, 101; Avery Barnard, South Bend, Ind., 99; Marion Fletcher, Minneapolis, 108.

To show the Kappas real bowling, Andy Bruno of New York City and Leo Muller of Minneapolis rolled an exhibition game. Bruno made a perfect score of 300, and Muller lacked but three pins of this score. Mr. Bruno is anchor man for the famous New York Athletic club team and was an exhibition partner of the famous Jimmy Smith, world famous champion bowler.

On Saturday Captain W. H. Fawcett and his son will give an exhibition in trapshooting.

Yesterday there was an added number of entertainment and the Crow Wing County Red Cross society sent its first aid and swimming instructor to the beach, and Kappas got technical training in life saving and resuscitation.

Winners in the bridge, tennis and golf tournaments will be made public tomorrow. The stunts program tonight began at 8 o'clock and the large audience completely filled Edgewater convention.

Among the clever dancing girls were Katherine Kinnaird of Butler College, and Bess Franklin of Purdue University.

At Penn cottage last night, Miss Elsie Weeden, of Marshalltown, Ia., a Kappa initiate of Monday evening, announced her engagement to Dr. Darrell I. Johnson of Clovis, New Mexico, who graduates in dentistry at the University of Iowa.

Indianapolis, Ind., June 30.—(U.P.)—Seven Minnesota boys and girls, members of a magazine selling crew, were again at work today after a near rebellion Friday. The trouble was caused by a rumor that the salesmen were "about to be deserted by the crew manager."

Broke, and a bit hungry due to the 75 cents a day allowance for food from the manager, seven of the eleven went to Prosecutor William H. Remy's office with a tale of woe, desertion by the boss, and vision of 700 hot July miles along concrete pavements back to Minnesota.

Deputy Prosecutor John L. Niblack arranged for them to spend the night at the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A. L. R. Roberts, 29, manager, was located. He denied any intention of desertion, rallied the hearts of the dispirited troops, gave the "forward, march" order, and generally reorganized his crew.

DRYS MOBILIZE TO ACT AGAINST

PROHIBITION LEADERS AN-

CONFERENCE

By CARL D. GROAT
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Houston, June 30.—The democratic convention legions were under way to their homes today, while drys mobilized to act against the party's presidential nominee, Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of Richmond, Va., and Arthur J. Barton, prominent dry leaders, announced the summoning of a dry conference at Asheville, N. C., between July 11 and 14 to consider the drys' course toward Smith.

Smith's frank espousal of dry law modification and temperance in his message to the convention yesterday hurled a tremendous surprise into the convention situation.

Friends of Smith and "wets" said the governor, in promising strict enforcement of all laws, if elected president, coupled with his view that "there would be fundamental changes in the present provisions for national prohibition," merely reiterated his previously known position.

Drys like former Secretary of the Navy Daniels held Smith had made a gratuitous pronouncement which merely complicated the drys' problem, especially in the south.

Professional dry leaders condemned the democratic convention course in nominating Smith, whom they characterized as a foe of prohibition. Barton and Cannon, for example, praised the party's dry plank, but said they deeply regretted "that the pro-liquor wing of the party led by Tammany Hall has disregarded all warnings and has challenged, indeed defied, the dry democracy of the south by the nomination of Smith."

Their call for a dry conference made it clear that some dry organizations intend to organize to combat Smith.

On the other hand, prominent democrats favorable to Smith said before departing for home that they did not believe the Smith statement would affect the campaign from a democratic standpoint.

Meantime, Chairman Key Pittman of the platform committee revealed that he had said in effect, during the dry debate in the platform committee, that the party's dry law enforcement plank did not mean a wet could not run on it and strive for amendment of the dry law nor that a dry could not do likewise and strive for a stronger dry law.

In other words, Pittman's argument—the counterpart of many democrats' claims—was that Smith as modificationist could uphold the law, but still attempt to point the way to its alteration.

DEMOCRACY'S NEW LEADER

THE Democratic party marches out of Houston under a new captain with new banners, new policies and new aims, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press editorially. It has burned the bridges of old Democracy, discarded the old leaders, scrapped the traditions and principles of the past. While reverting with oratorical fervor to the philosophies of Jefferson and Jackson, it ignores the newer testaments of Cleveland, of Bryan and of Woodrow Wilson.

The cardinal doctrine of free trade has been converted into a "Democratic tariff based on justice for all." Woodrow Wilson's passionate appeal for the League of Nations, to which he sacrificed his life, now becomes a declaration for "freedom from entangling political alliances with foreign nations."

The standard which Bryan carried for a quarter of a century has been given into the hands of the hero of Tammany Hall, and on it are inscribed new words written in a new idiom. The rural Democracy of the past has become the urban Democracy of today.

Al Smith has wrested leadership of the party away from the natural inheritors of the tradition of Wilson, Bryan, Cleveland. But though this sashem of Tammany has forced his party to follow him, he has not won his victory by taking all and giving nothing. No man in public life has more clearly and openly stood as representative of that body of American opinion which thinks that the present prohibition provisions are a failure. In his telegram of acceptance Governor Smith, not without courage, faces the patent fact that he has been given a platform that does not square with his own views. The convention has not had a word to say about changing the provisions of prohibition, contenting itself with a platitudinous statement that the law should be enforced. Governor Smith consents to take the leadership of the party nonetheless, but throws a sop to consistency by re-affirming his own personal opinion.

Once before in this century a Democratic nominee found himself at variance with his party's convention attitude on a burning public question. Alton B. Parker's telegram to the Democratic convention of 1904, declining the nomination which had already been given him unless the monetary plank were changed to accord with his gold views, was one of the most courageous acts of American politics. The convention heard and obeyed. Needless to say, Governor Smith's method of reconciling himself to the prohibition plank in the present platform is not up to the standard set by Judge Parker.

The Democrats stand before the country under the leadership of a new metropolitan city type strong to his party. To be governor of New York state is one thing; to be president of the United States something far different. Al Smith presents the paradox of a man who is known as a personality from coast to coast and yet remains a stranger to the nation he aspires to lead. His views on national questions, his attitude toward international problems, his policies in the larger field are wholly unknown. Who is Al Smith? He is a sashem of Tammany Hall who rose to be governor of New York four times, acquitted himself very creditably in that position, and has acquired a reputation for winning personal magnetism.

The Democratic party in nominating Al Smith bids the voters of the country draw a blind card to take a chance on the selection of a President. Al Smith is an unknown quantity in national affairs. He has served the state of New York and proved himself a highly competent administrator in the local sphere. He has made himself thoroughly conversant with matters concerning his own immediate environment. But in the larger issues affecting the 48 states as a whole he has maintained a silence unbroken save in two particulars. The two exceptions are prohibition and water power. So far as the first is concerned, Smith, an avowed Wet, is running on a dry platform, which leaves him on both sides of the question. In water power he has gradually shifted his ground and now holds a middle position on government ownership and operation.

For the rest, he is an unknown quantity. How he reacts to national questions, what views he holds, where he stands, these are mysteries. Al Smith has studiously held aloof from affairs of the country at large, either from lack of interest or political discretion. A President of the United States must be familiar with questions as broad as the continent, he must survey the field with an eye that can take in all.

The sidewalks of New York are not the pathways to that statesmanship and broad grasp of national and international affairs which the American people expect in the White House. Personality is not enough to make a President.

PROHIBITION AND THE PARTIES

THE platform makers of the great parties lose more sleep over the difficult question what to say about prohibition than they do over any other subject, farm relief by no means excepted.

That isn't surprising, since there is no issue between the parties about prohibition, and small chance of making an issue between them when both are afraid to do it.

The dividing line on this as on some other issues is not between the parties but across them. It is of course impossible to essay the strength of the two sides in the two parties, but possibly the Republicans are sixty per cent dry and forty per cent wet, and the Democrats are sixty per cent wet and forty per cent dry.

On the whole probably the Republicans are more homogeneous on this issue than the Democrats. They are divided, of course, but they are divided in about the same way everywhere.

The Democrats, though, are divided sectionally. The city Democrats average about as wet as people get to be. But the Southern Democrats—and the Democratic party is chiefly made up of Southerners and city folk—on the other hand are about as dry as people get to be.

With a wet candidate and a pervading dryness in the very hotbed of Democracy, the South, Democratic platform-makers have a more anxious job than the Republican resolutioners. In both parties the artisans who shape the platforms would be made very happy if there were some way to lay this issue on the shelf along with free silver. It will not be so disposed of for quite some time.—Duluth Herald.

Chicago, June 30.—(UP)—Banked by floral tributes from thousands of his followers, the body of Big Tim Murphy, assassinated labor leader, lay in his home awaiting burial today.

Unless some last-minute change in plans is made, the funeral will not be held in a church. Pastors of the Catholic church here have been strong in their disapproval of gangsters and gang warfare, and Murphy's relatives have made no request for a church service.

Nevertheless, the last rites for the pioneer racketeer promised to be elaborate and colorful. A funeral cortege a mile long, with scores of flower-laden automobiles following the casket from the home to the cemetery, has been arranged.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

ALEDA RAY, pretty, blue-eyed country girl, aids Gary Chester, young engineer, who has been injured in an automobile accident. Next day Alela leaves for New York to find work. On the train she makes the acquaintance of Marise de Rense, proprietor of a New York cabaret, who invites Alela to stay with her in the city. Alela succeeds in getting a secretarial position in New York and learns that Chester is employed by the same firm. Gary fails to recognize her. Alela, lonely and blue, calls upon Marise. The latter's welcome is so sincere that Alela accepts the invitation to make her home there. Returning to her hotel to pack, Alela learns that Chester has 'phoned twice for her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER X.
THE "Harvest Moon"—that jolly little night-club—was waking up to life towards 11 o'clock.

In the West Fifties, built to the rear of a dilapidated garage, and with a most unsavory entrance, the scene hit the eye of the newcomer with all the glitter of Aladdin's Cave.

Because Alela—clad for the occasion in a chiffon frock Marise had loaned her—had never in her life seen the inside of a night-club, she stood on the threshold with Clive Mortimer in a kind of daze.

"Blinking like an owl" commented Goldie de Rense, acidly, to her older sister. "Why on earth you're putting yourself out by playing fairy godmother to that country rube, is beyond my knowledge! And now you've got her all dolled up in your best pink chiffon, watch her throw the glad eye to your best beau!"

The "beau" was Clive. Annoyed at Goldie's words, Marise yet shot a quick, anxious glance towards the handsome couple who were entering.

Clive was impressionable. She knew it. And Alela was a very pretty, unspoiled sort of girl. . . . the type of a girl to appeal to the Englishman's jaded fancy. . . .

There were so many of the other kind, right in this town. Gold-diggers, like Goldie (she loved her younger sister—dated to admit it) . . . free-and-easy girls, who flung their names to right and left. . . . girls whose sole idea was a "good time," who never read an interesting book, or had a worth-while thought.

She herself—Marise de Rense—had had no proper education, unless it be from the University of Hard Knocks! A graduate there, with or without honors—she had suffered in her life, and bitterly. Deeply she resented her lost opportunities!

How fresh Alela looked, how radiant! In the pink gown that she had loaned her, just like a drift of apple blossom! With a contraction of the heart, Marise was thinking: "I looked like that, twenty years ago! She doesn't look a day over eighteen! And Clive sees it, and is attracted by her sweet simplicity. All men, even the rotters, are drawn by unspoiled loveliness—by the flower that hasn't yet been plucked!"

She got up hastily, and in her black-beaded frock—amazingly décolleté—crossed the slippery floor.

"Come on in." She grabbed Alela by the hand, but her eyes were on Clive Mortimer. "You act like a couple of country cousins

He caught the sharp note, smiled upon Marise. He lowered his voice to whisper, flatteringly: "I was dazzled by the sight of you, my dear. You're beautiful—like a—like a black diamond in that frock, tonight!"

"Um! Hard—and glittering—and a fake?" Marise was mollified, however. She led the way to one of the tiny stucco caves that were embedded in the wall.

Alela was enthralled. "It's fairyland." She stooped her head under the arch and squeezed into the little aperture.

There were other tiny excavations all around the room, each with a glass-topped, and internally illuminated water-table in which gold-fish swam. A lantern up above her head contained a live canary, hopping on its perch.

And high in the main ceiling of the hall was an electric moon—a "harvest moon"—shedding a quaint blue light to give an ethereal aspect to the scene.

Couples were sitting in the small arched caves. In close proximity. They had a lot of spurious privacy—purely in the imagination—since each "retreat" was as brightly lighted by the canary-lantern and the gold-fish tanks as though it were the stage!

"If they want to kiss, they have to do it on the dance-floor, underneath the harvest-moon," smiled Marise. "In that dim light, and when the place is crowded, it's much less prominent than the holes-in-the-wall, I'll say!"

Clive, who was sitting at the table with them, carelessly suggested: "Then why not turn out a light or two and sacrifice the gold fish and canaries to the human dickerers and poor-fish-in-love? Why not fling a little blessed darkness into the courting caverns, eh?"

Marise was nettled. "I've got my reputation to maintain. This is a respectable club, not one of your Piccadilly dives or Leicester Squares! Besides, strange as that may seem to such a fascinator as yourself, at least half of the girls come here to show off their dresses and have a good time in the open, with no thought of petting parties or love-making in-the dark!"

"Ha! Got you there again!" quoth Goldie who had drifted up to their little cave. She leaned on the glass table, the light from its interior illuminating her elfin, mocking face. "You haven't got a chance, Clive, old dear, against the sharp-tongued wimmens in their thirties! So why not leave their dam walls, and give us flappers a chance?"

Clive grinned. He protested: "Miss Ray is still a flapper. And as for Marise, I'd back her—sharp tongue and everything—against your Sweet Seventeens! Not so, Marise?" He slipped a hand below the table and patted the older woman's knee. "Come on and dance! I want to foot it beneath the harvest moon with my old flame!"

Marise was mollified at once. The Hawaiian orchestra was crooning forth a melody of passion. She arose.

"Dotty about that poor fish, isn't she? It's pitiful to watch—Miss Goldie was gazing down into the table, where, in the water, a gleaming denizen was feverishly chasing her male. "She's six years older than he, too—"

"You mean, the goldfish?" asked Alela, mystified, and following her glance.

Miss Goldie giggled. "You are slow. I mean the fish without the gold—Clive Mortimer!"

A magnificent live parrot—his plumage, green and red and yellow—swung arrogantly upon a golden hook. As Clive went by him in the dance, he made as though to take a peck at him. Clive flung away from that sharp beak.

Goldie laughed spitefully and clapped her hands. "Jamaica! hates him. That bird has better judgment than Marise, I'll say!" She slipped in beside Alela in the little grotto, and her sharp eyes fixed themselves upon the entrance of the club. "Now, if Marise could only pick a regular fellow, like the one I've got my eye on! He's a real person—a go-getter—and a prince for looks!"

"Who is he?" asked Alela idly. Her thoughts were on the mysterious phone calls sent to her hotel that day by Gary Chester—he hadn't recognized her in the office—yet, later, he had called her up! Did that imply he was too snobbish to recognize a mere stenographer in her working hours? No one in New York—beyond the woman of the agency—had known Alela was staying in that particular hotel, and certainly no one in the office knew it. . . . It was extremely odd!

Love's Ecstasy

WHAT HAS HAPPENED SO FAR.

ALEDA RAY, pretty, blue-eyed country girl, aids Gary Chester, young engineer, who has been injured in an automobile accident. Next day Alveda leaves for New York to find work. On the train she makes the acquaintance of Marise de Rense, proprietor of a New York cabaret, who invites Alveda to stay with her in the city. Alveda succeeds in getting a secretarial position in New York and learns that Chester is employed by the same firm. Gary fails to recognize her. Alveda, lonely and blue, calls upon Marise. The latter's welcome is so sincere that Alveda accepts the invitation to make her home there. Returning to her hotel to pack, Alveda learns that Chester has 'phoned twice for her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER X.
"The 'Harvest Moon'—that jolly little night-club—was waking up to life towards 11 o'clock.

In the West Fifties, built to the rear of a dilapidated garage, and with a most unsavory entrance, the scene hit the eye of the newcomer with all the glitter of Alveda's Cave.

Because Alveda—clad for the occasion in a chiffon frock Marise had loaned her—had never in her life seen the inside of a night-club, she stood on the threshold with Clive Mortimer in a kind of daze.

"Blinking like an owl!" commented Goldie de Rense, acidly, to her older sister. "Why on earth you're putting yourself out by playing fairy godmother to that country rube, is beyond my knowledge! And now you've got her all dolled up in your best pink chiffon, watch her throw the glad eye to your best beau!"

The "beau" was Clive. Annoyed at Goldie's words, Marise yet shot a quick, anxious glance toward the handsome couple who were entering.

Clive was impressionable. She knew it. And Alveda was a very pretty, unspoiled sort of girl—the type of a girl to appeal to the Englishman's jaded fancy.

There were so many of the other kind, right in this town. Goldie, like Goldie (she loved her younger sister—hated to admit it)—free-and-easy girls, who flung their names to right and left... girls whose sole idea was a "good time," who never read an interesting book, or had a worth-while thought.

She herself—Marise de Rense—had had no proper education, unless it be from the University of Hard Knocks! A graduate there, with or without honors—she had suffered in her life, and bitterly. Deeply she resented her lost opportunities!

How fresh Alveda looked, how radiant! In the pink gown that she had loaned her, just like a drift of apple blossom! With a contraction of the heart, Marise was thinking: "I looked like that, twenty years ago! She doesn't look a day over eighteen! And Clive sees it, and is attracted by her sweet simplicity. All men, even the rotters, are drawn by unspoiled loveliness—by the flower that hasn't yet been plucked!"

She got up hastily, and in her black-beaded frock—amazingly décolleté—crossed the slippery floor.

"Come on in." She grabbed Alveda by the hand, but her eyes were on Clive Mortimer. "You act like a couple of country cousins."

He caught the sharp note, smiled upon Marise. He lowered his voice to whisper, flatteringly: "I was dazzled by the sight of you, my dear. You're beautiful—like a—like a black diamond in that frock, tonight!"

"Um! Hard—and glittering—and a fake?" Marise was mollified, however. She led the way to one of the tiny stucco caves that were embedded in the wall.

Alveda was enthralled. "It's fairy-land." She stooped her head under the arch and squeezed into the little aperture.

There were other tiny excavations all around the room, each with a glass-topped, and internally illuminated water-table in which gold-fish swam. A lantern up above her head contained a live canary, hopping on its perch.

And high in the main ceiling of the hall was an electric moon—a "harvest moon"—shedding a quaint blue light to give an ethereal aspect to the scene.

Couples were sitting in the small arched caves. In close proximity. They had a lot of spurious privacy—purely in the imagination—since each "retreat" was as brightly lighted by the canary-lantern and the gold-fish tanks as though it were the stage!

"If they want to kiss, they have to do it on the dance-floor, underneath the harvest-moon," smiled Marise. "In that dim light, and when the place is crowded, it's much less prominent than the holes-in-the-wall, I'll say!"

Clive, who was sitting at the table with them, carelessly suggested: "Then why not turn out a light or two and sacrifice the gold fish and canaries to the human diceys and poor-fish-in-love? Why not fling a little blessed darkness into the courting caverns, eh?"

Marise was nettled. "I've got my reputation to maintain. This is a respectable club, not one of

"Hail! Got you there again!" quoth Goldie who had drifted up to their little cave. She leaned on the glass table, the light from its interior illuminating her elfin, mocking face. "You haven't got a chance, Clive, old dear, against the sharp-tongued wimmings in their thirties! So why not leave their dam wiles, and give us flappers a chance?"

Clive grinned. He protested: "Miss Ray is still a flapper. And as for Marise, I'd back her—sharp tongue and everything—against your Sweet Seventeens! Not so, Marise?" He slipped a hand below the table and patted the older woman's knee. "Come on and dance! I want to foot it beneath the harvest moon with my old flame!"

Marise was mollified at once. The Hawaiian orchestra was crooning forth a melody of passion. She arose.

"Dotty about that poor fish, isn't she? It's pitiful to watch—Miss Goldie was gazing down into the table, where, in the water, a gleaming denizen was feverishly chasing her male. 'She's six years older than he, too—'

"You mean, the goldfish?" asked Alveda, mystified, and following her glance.

Miss Goldie giggled. "You are slow. I mean the fish without the gold—Clive Mortimer!"

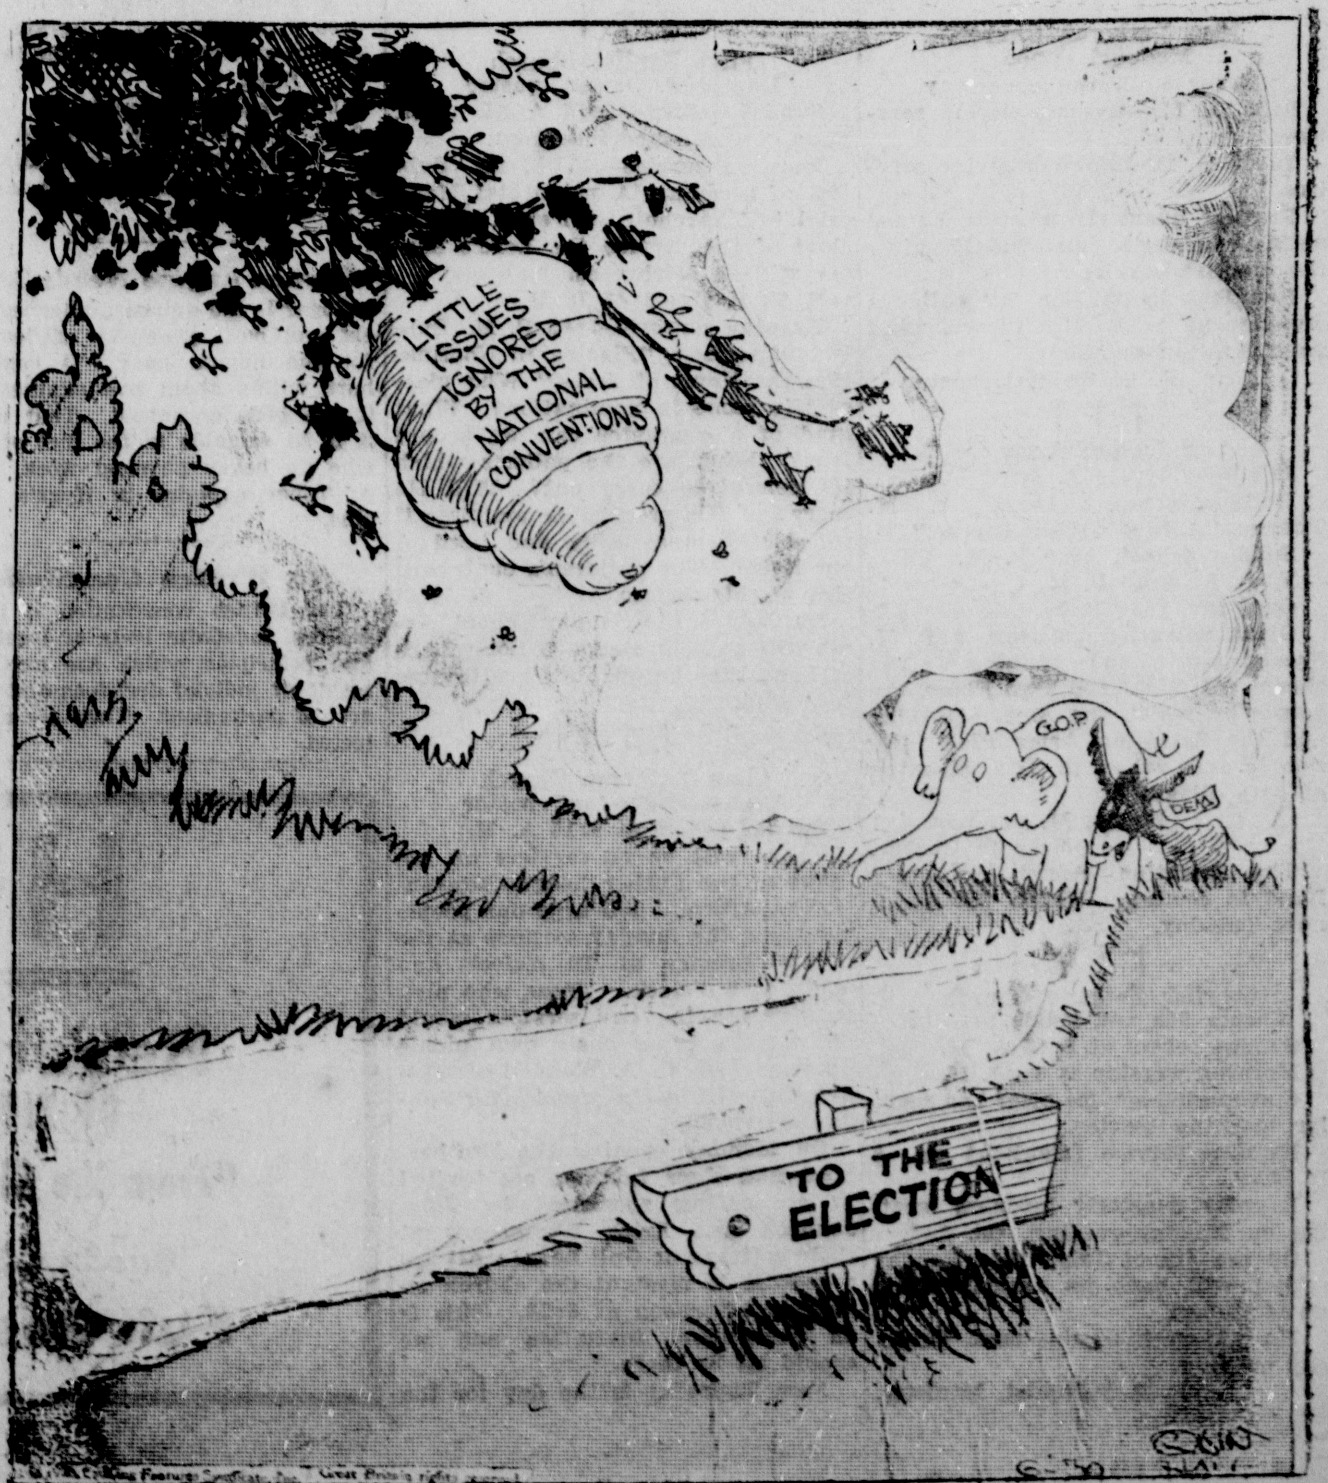

A magnificent live parrot—his plumage, green and red and yellow—swung arrogantly upon a golden hook. As Clive went by him in the dance, he made as though to take a peck at him. Clive flung away from that sharp beak.

Goldie laughed spitefully and clapped her hands. "Jamaica! hates him. That bird has better judgment than Marise, I'll say!" She slipped in beside Alveda in the little grotto, and her sharp eyes fixed themselves upon the entrance of the club. "Now, if Marise could only pick a regular fellow, like the one I've got my eye on! He's a real person—a go-getter—and a prince for looks!"

"Who is he?" asked Alveda idly. Her thoughts were on the mysterious phone calls sent to her hotel that day by Gary Chester—he hadn't recognized her in the office—yet, later, he had called her up! Did that imply he was too snobbish to recognize a mere stenographer in her working hours? No one in New York—beyond the woman of the agency—had known Alveda was staying in that particular hotel, and certainly no one in the office knew it... It was extremely odd!

Braingerd Elks have returned from Willmar happy with a beautiful trophy in their possession, the result of their degree team's high exemplification of ritualistic work in the contest Thursday evening at the State Elks Convention. Braingerd won over Mankato and the work put on by the local team was acclaimed as the finest ever presented in Willmar.

The Willmar Daily Tribune in a special edition carries the following story on Thursday evening activities.

Among local Elks in attendance at the Willmar meet besides the degree team were: Basil T. Heath, A. Smraker, Robert Peterson, Clarence Wheeler, Walter Folsom, Axel Fall.

Here is what the Willmar Daily Tribune said of Tom Woods, formerly of Braingerd, and in attendance at the convention:

Largest drum major in world at Willmar. What is that mountain of flesh coming down Litchfield Avenue? None other than Tommie Woods world's largest drum major, famed in movies as side kick to Charlie Chaplin—drum major deluxe for the tattered corps at Santa Monica, California, and guest major of the Minneapolis No. 44 Elks band.

He's 6 ft., 4 1/2 inches high, six feet around, 375 lbs. in weight, good looking, only 34 years and unmarried.

Tommy is visiting at Minneapolis and is a guest of No. 44. He wore his bright red coat, blue trousers and everything in the parade.

PILOTS TAKE OFF TODAY

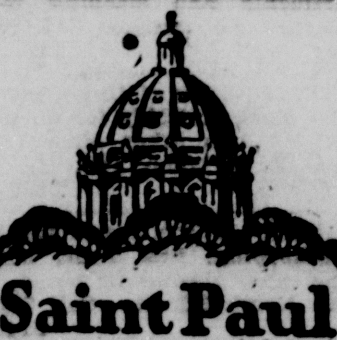

Fourth National Air Tour Covers
6,200 Miles Over
16 States

Many nationally known pilots took off today from the Ford airport, Detroit, Mich., competing in the Fourth National Air Tour and striving for much sought after Edsel Ford silver trophy and the Monarch Coffee award of $1,000 to the crew of the winning ship.

Among the interesting planes in the tour is the new Ryan brougham, entered by Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, and which is piloted by his friend and former flying partner, Phillip Love. There is also a plane entered by Edward F. Schlee and William S. Brock, pilots of the "Pride of Detroit" on the attempted around-the-world flight last year. This plane is similar to that used by Clarence D. Chamberlain on his flight to Germany.

The 1928 air tour is the most ambitious that has yet been attempted, and constitutes a gruelling test for both planes and pilots. It covers 6,200 miles and extends over 16 states, with stops at more than 30 cities. The trip will be south and then to the west coast and back to Detroit, passing through St. Paul on the return trip.

W. W. BANE APPEALS TO DISTRICT COURT

Was Recently Found Guilty by Judge J. H. Warner of Violation of Game Laws

WAS FINED TEN DOLLARS

Braingerd Attorney Requests Interpretation of Law by Game
and Fish Commission

W. W. Bane who was found guilty of violation of the state game laws through the charge of shooting a gray squirrel has appealed the decision of Judge J. H. Warner to the district court.

Notice of appeal has been filed and sent to D. H. Fullerton, city attorney.

Judge Warner in finding Mr. Bane guilty of shooting the squirrel on June 8 fined him $10.

Mr. Bane yesterday appealed to the Minnesota Game and Fish commission for an interpretation of the law governing the abatement of animals which have become nuisances.

His letter follows:
"On June 27, I was convicted, under the state game laws, in the municipal court, of this city, of the crime of killing a gray squirrel within the corporate limits of the city.

"The facts, as proved at the trial, were that the squirrel was in a tree in my front yard trying to destroy a robin's nest and kill the young birds and that I climbed the tree and tried all reasonable means to drive the squirrel out of the tree, and failing in this I shot it.

"It was also testified to by a reputable citizen that he had seen a gray squirrel destroy a robin's nest and a wren's nest and kill the young birds.

"My defense was that the squirrel had become a private nuisance in that it was interfering with the peaceable enjoyment of my home, and that I had the common law right to abate the nuisance by the use of all reasonable means even to killing the squirrel.

"As you will notice by the article clipped from the Braingerd Daily Dispatch, which article I believe was written by the judge, that he holds squarely that where an animal is protected by the game laws that there can be no justification or excuse for any killing it, even though it is a nuisance and is destroying property, and interfering with the enjoyment of property, without first having received an order from you permitting its destruction.

"I can not believe that this is the proper interpretation of the law and after the trial I asked the judge if, under his holding, I should kill a skunk, an animal protected by the game laws, while it was killing my chickens, I would be guilty of an offense against the game laws and he stated that I would, unless I had first received an order from you permitting the killing and if I was arrested for so killing a skunk and brought before him he would have to find me guilty and impose a fine.

"I might say that I am still unconvinced that his interpretation of the law is right, and have appealed from the conviction in this case.

"If the judge in this case has rightly interpreted the law, it would seem that a gray squirrel or a skunk has greater rights under the law than a citizen has and that you have more autocratic power than the Czar of Russia ever even claimed.

"I shall be interested to know if you really believe that the game laws can make a predatory animal as sacred in Minnesota, as is a cat in India or a white elephant in Siam.

"Another interesting feature of this case is that at least one of the persons who induced your deputy to make the complaint in this case is a neighbor of mine, against whom I had once brought suit, as attorney, and attached his wages in garnishment proceedings, and that your deputy was induced to promise not to reveal the names of the persons insisting on my arrest.

"It would seem to me that if you are assuming such autocratic power under the game laws, you should at least see that you and the game laws, as well as the courts, are not used to vent a private spite, as it appears to me was done in this case.

"Owing to the wide publicity which the newspapers have seen fit to give this case, I am asking the Braingerd Daily Dispatch to publish this letter."

URGE ALL GROWERS TO ENTER PEONIES

Special Exhibition to be Held Monday and Tuesday at Tur-cotte Brothers

SPECIAL PRIZES AWARDED

Money Derived From Sale to be Turned Over to Garden and
Flower Society

W. V. Turcotte who announced yesterday the holding of a special peony exhibition in the offices of Turcotte Brothers, South Sixth street Monday and Tuesday, today urges all peony growers to exhibit flowers at that showing.

"The more flowers sold on Tuesday will mean more money for the Crow Wing County Garden and Flower society to be used for the purchase of prizes for the annual flower show," said Mr. Turcotte.

The peony show here the first two days of next week will attract growers throughout the city and county. Peonies this season in this county have been backward on account of the changeable weather conditions.

One of the prettiest peony beds in the city is that along the center of the boulevard between Kingwood street and Gregory park on North Sixth street. Of the 115 plants there 75 peonies are in bloom. The flowers were planted by W. V. Turcotte with the assistance in the care of the plot by members of the Rotary club, the Baptist church and the Methodist church.

Largest drum major in world at

PILOTS TAKE OFF TODAY

Fourth National Air Tour Covers
6,200 Miles Over
16 States

Many nationally known pilots took off today from the Ford airport, Detroit, Mich., competing in the Fourth National Air Tour and striving for much sought after Edsel
Ford silver trophy and the Monarch Coffee award of $1,000 to the crew of the winning ship.

Among the interesting planes in the tour is the new Ryan brougham, entered by Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, and which is piloted by his friend and former flying partner, Phillip Love. There is also a plane entered by Edward F. Schlee and William S. Brock, pilots of the "Pride of Detroit" on the attempted around-the-world flight last year.
This plane is similar to that used by Clarence D. Chamberlain on his flight to Germany.

The 1928 air tour is the most ambitious that has yet been attempted, and constitutes a gruelling test for both planes and pilots. It covers 6,200 miles and extends over 16 states, with stops at more than 30 cities. The trip will be south and then to the west coast and back to Detroit, passing through St. Paul on the return trip.

W. W. BANE APPEALS TO DISTRICT COURT

Was Recently Found Guilty by Judge J. H. Warner of Violation of Game Laws

WAS FINED TEN DOLLARS

Braierd Attorney Requests Interpretation of Law by Game
and Fish Commission

W. W. Bane who was found guilty of violation of the state game laws through the charge of shooting a gray squirrel has appealed the decision of Judge J. H. Warner to the district court.

Notice of appeal has been filed and sent to D. H. Fullerton, city attorney.

Judge Warner in finding Mr. Bane guilty of shooting the squirrel on June 8 fined him $10.

Mr. Bane yesterday appealed to the Minnesota Game and Fish commission for an interpretation of the law governing the abatement of animals which have become nuisances.

His letter follows:
"On June 27, I was convicted, under the state game laws, in the municipal court, of this city, of the crime of killing a gray squirrel within the corporate limits of the city.

"The facts, as proved at the trial, were that the squirrel was in a tree in my front yard trying to destroy a robin's nest and kill the young birds and that I climbed the tree and tried all reasonable means to drive the squirrel out of the tree, and failing in this I shot it.

"It was also testified to by a reputable citizen that he had seen a gray squirrel destroy a robin's nest and a wren's nest and kill the young birds.

"My defense was that the squirrel had become a private nuisance in that it was interfering with the peaceable enjoyment of my home, and that I had the common law right to abate the nuisance by the use of all reasonable means even to killing the squirrel.

"As you will notice by the article clipped from the Brainerd Daily Dispatch, which article I believe was written by the judge, that he holds squarely that where an animal is protected by the game laws that there can be no justification of excuse for any killing it, even though it is a nuisance and is destroying property, and interfering with the enjoyment of property, without first having received an order from you permitting its destruction.

"I can not believe that this is the proper interpretation of the law and after the trial I asked the judge if, under his holding, I should kill a skunk, an animal protected by the game laws, while it was killing my chickens, I would be guilty of an offense against the game laws and he stated that I would, unless I had first received an order from you permitting the killing and if I was arrested for so killing a skunk and brought before him he would have to find me guilty and impose a fine.

"I might say that I am still unconvinced that his interpretation of the law is right, and have appealed from the conviction in this case.

"If the judge in this case has rightly interpreted the law, it would seem that a gray squirrel or a skunk has greater rights under the law than a citizen has and that you have more autocratic power than the Czar of Russia ever even claimed.

"I shall be interested to know if you really believe that the game laws can make a predatory animal as sacred in Minnesota, as is a cat in India or a white elephant in Siam.
"Another interesting feature of this case is that at least one of the persons who induced your deputy to make the complaint in this case is a neighbor of mine, against whom I had once brought suit, as attorney, and attached his wages in garnishee proceedings, and that your deputy was induced to promise not to reveal the names of the persons insisting on my arrest.

"It would seem to me that if you are assuming such autocratic power under the game laws, you should at least see that you and the game laws, as well as the courts, are not used to vent a private spite, as it appears to me was done in this case.
"Owing to the wide publicity which the newspapers have seen fit to give this case, I am asking the Brainerd Daily Dispatch to publish this letter."

Special Exhibition to be Held Monday and Tuesday at Tur-
cotte Brothers

SPECIAL PRIZES AWARDED

Money Derived From Sale to be Turned Over to Garden and
Flower Society

W. V. Turcotte who announced yesterday the holding of a special peony exhibition in the offices of Turcotte Brothers, South Sixth street Monday and Tuesday, today urges all peony growers to exhibit flowers at that showing.

"The more flowers sold on Tuesday will mean more money for the Crown Wing County Garden and Flower society to be used for the purchase of prizes for the annual flower show," said Mr. Turcotte.

The peony show here the first two days of next week will attract growers throughout the city and county.
Peonies this season in this county have been backward on account of the changeable weather conditions.

One of the prettiest peony beds in the city is that along the center of the boulevard between Kingwood street and Gregory park on North Sixth street. Of the 115 plants there 75 peonies are in bloom. The flowers were planted by W. V. Tur-cotte with the assistance in the care of the plot by members of the Rotary club, the Baptist church and the Methodist church.

MEETS STIFFEST OPPOSITION AT WIMBLEDON

HER OPPONENT IS TO BE MRS.
HOLCROFT WATSON OF
GREAT BRITAIN

CALIFORNIA GIRL STILL IS FIG-URED A CERTAIN WIN-NER

By ROBERT C. DOWSON
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Wimbledon, Eng., June 30.—Helen Wills, (a Kappa Kappa Gamma) in the women's division of the all-English tennis championships today meets the stiffest opposition she has yet encountered. Her opponent will be Mrs. Holcroft Watson of Great Britain.

The California girl still is figured a certain winner, although Mrs. Watson and Senorita D'Alvarez of Spain are expected to make strong bids for the title.

In the men's singles, the situation is even more precarious. William T. Tilden, captain of the American Davis cup team, is the only player from the United States esteemed capable of holding his own with the strong array of tennis warriors from France. The French have six of the eight men in the quarter finals and are out to establish an all-French final, as was the case last year at Wimbledon.

Tilden today meets Pierre Landry for a place in the last eight and is a strong favorite. After disposing of Landry, the American ace will have to meet Jean Borotra, the basque, who is expected to defeat Crawford of Australia today.

Junior Coen of Kansas City, partnered with Miss Penelope Anderson, gets into action in the mixed doubles today against R. W. Wackett and Mrs. F. M. Strawson, while Johnny Hennessey of Indianapolis and Helen Jacobs of California play E. Du Plaix and Miss H. Evelyn Jones of England. A. V. Bridge and Mrs. C. G. McQuillan of England.

In the first match of the day Henri Cochet and Jacques Brugnon defeated Harry O. Hopman and F. R. L. Crawford 10-8, 6-2, 7-9, 4-6, 6-4.

The French team entered the final sixteen by this victory.

Wimbledon Stadium, Eng., June 30.—(U.P.)—Miss Helen Wills, American champion of all leading tennis countries, entered the semi-finals in the women's singles of the all-England tennis championships today

when she defeated Mrs. Michael Watson, British star, in straight sets, 6-3, 6-0.

Miss Wills probably will meet Miss Elizabeth Ryan, the other surviving American in the semi-final round.

Miss Wills toyed with Mrs. Watson, who was unable to produce her usual form. Her drives lacked punch and her groundwork was unsteady. The British woman's service were weak, also. Miss Wills never was obliged to extend herself.

The winners took the lead in the first inning and continued to increase their lead as the game progressed.

Whitlock was given good support by his team mates. Engbertson, I. O. O. F. pitcher, had three strikeouts to his credit.

SONNENBERG IS INJURED IN BOUT WITH LEWIS

Boston, June 30.—(U.P.)—Gus Sonnenberg, former Dartmouth football star, and heavyweight wrestling challenger, was injured last night in a match with Ed "Strangler" Lewis at the Boston arena. Sonnenberg was knocked unconscious when he missed in a dive and dove over the heads of newspapermen and landed head first on the floor of the arena. Physicians said he had suffered concussion of the brain.

MEETS STIFFEST OPPOSITION AT WIMBLEDON

HER OPPONENT IS TO BE MRS.
HOLCROFT WATSON OF
GREAT BRITAIN

CALIFORNIA GIRL STILL IS FIG-URED A CERTAIN WIN-NER

By ROBERT C. DOWSON
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Wimbledon, Eng., June 30.—Helen Wills, (a Kappa Kappa Gamma) in the women's division of the all-comers tennis championships today meets the stiffest opposition she has yet encountered. Her opponent will be Mrs. Holcroft Watson of Great Britain.

The California girl still is figured a certain winner, although Mrs. Watson and Senorita D'Alvarez of Spain are expected to make strong bids for the title.

In the men's singles, the situation is even more precarious. William T. Tilden, captain of the American Davis cup team, is the only player from the United States esteemed capable of holding his own with the strong array of tennis warriors from France. The French have six of the eight men in the quarter finals and are out to establish an all-French final, as was the case last year at Wimbledon.

Tilden today meets Pierre Landry for a place in the last eight and is a strong favorite. After disposing of Landry, the American ace will have to meet Jean Borotra, the basque, who is expected to defeat Crawford of Australia today.

Junior Coen of Kansas City, partnered with Miss Penelope Anderson, gets into action in the mixed doubles today against R. W. Wackett and Mrs. F. M. Strawson, while Johnny Hennessey of Indianapolis and Helen Jacobs of California play E. Du Plaix and Miss H. Evelyn Jones of Englewood, V. Bridge and Mrs. C. G. McQuillan of England.

In the first match of the day Henri Cochet and Jacques Brugnon defeated Harry O. Hopman and F. R. L. Crawford 10-8, 6-2, 7-9, 4-6, 6-4.

The French team entered the final sixteen by this victory.

Wimbledon Stadium, Eng., June 30.—(U.P.)—Miss Helen Wills, American champion of all leading tennis countries, entered the semi-finals in the women's singles of the all-England tennis championships today

when she defeated Mrs. Michael Watson, British star, in straight sets, 6-2, 6-0.

Miss Wills probably will meet Miss Elizabeth Ryan, the other surviving American in the semi-final round.

Miss Wills toyed with Mrs. Watson, who was unable to produce her usual form. Her drives lacked punch and her groundwork was unsteady. The British woman's service were weak, also. Miss Wills never was obliged to extend herself.

Will He Help Out With the Davis Cup?

By QUIN HALL.

THE tennis fans will be all agog from now on until after the Davis Cup matches later in the summer.

Francis Hunter, one of Uncle Sam's high ranking racketeers, has been over on the other side of the briny for some time and with Bill Tilden, George Lott, Jr., John Hennessey and Wilbur Coen, Jr., now settled abroad, interest in the annual classic among the sport bugs is bound to pick up extra momentum.

Just how Francis will figure in the Davis Cup matches is still problematical and probably will remain so until just before the games. Before Big Bill led his gang over the pond there was a little flutter of excitement as to whether the gaunt veteran of so many international struggles would be allowed to choose the Cup team this year or whether the Tennis Association might rule otherwise. No definite announcement concerning this phase of the matches was made before the quartet boarded the oversized skiff which carried them across.

Hunter's status may pivot round this decision. It is likely that if Tilden decides to play in the doubles, Hunter will be his choice as a partner. His determination to pair with Hunter caused skirmishes at the Sea Bright tournament last summer and he intimated before getting away that he would prefer Hunter as a partner in case he works in the doubles in the big games.

However, should the younger team of Lott and Hennessey prove superior to the veterans in the practice matches arranged for the other side, then they may be nominated to play in the classic.

Hunter, who was winner with Tilden in the Davis Cup doubles and the American and English doubles championships last season, and ranked second only to Tilden in this country, has been abroad since April and has been playing in French and English championship matches. While they haven't been breaking so well for the racket wielder, he may show improved form in the practice t'ts leading up to the really big tennis event of the year, when it is almost a foregone conclusion that the U. S. will again be pitted against the French in the play for the pester mug, emblematic of the Davis Cup.

The impression prevails that if Hunter is shunted aside for men ranked below him Tilden will probably take it harder than Francis will. Tilden is naturally the first choice to play the singles in the Davis matches. His chance of winning will be greatly enhanced if he does not bear the additional burden of the doubles. If Tilden is out of the doubles then the idea prevails that Hunter will, likewise, be out and the lineup that appeared the strongest when the U. S. team embarked seems to be Tilden and either Lott or Hennessey for the singles with Lott and Hennessey working in the doubles. This would eliminate Hunter as well as Junior Coen but the latter is only sixteen years old and is being taken along largely for seasoning for future matches and will doubtless see no action in this year's classic unless illness or accidents to other members of the team make it necessary.

The Hunter boosters over here are naturally pulling for their idol and Hunter has a lot of friends among the tennis fans. He is extremely honest and modest about his game.

To prove it he frankly admits that he probably has the poorest form of any player who ever was given a high ranking. That's candor but with a racket in his hand he can make the best of them step and step plenty.
